A Reflection on the Design for Health Education from the UIA International Student Competition

The goals were to assess the current state of design for health education globally and identify areas needing improvement. While the entries demonstrated strong architectural design skill training, adopting the evidence-based design approach, and addressing climate change remain areas for improvement.